

Laurence Lovat

Consultant Professor of Gastroenterology & Biophotonics
London

Professor Laurence Lovat undertook his medical training at University College London. He then received an MRC Research Training Award for his 1st Class Honours degree in Nutrition. Professor Lovat is now based at the London Gastroenterology Centre, 41 Welbeck Street.

Professor Laurence Lovat is a highly experienced Gastroenterologist in London who treats conditions affecting the gut and upper gastrointestinal tract, specialising in gastroesophageal reflux disease, Barrett's oesophagus and upper gastrointestinal cancer.

Professor Laurence Lovat undertook his medical training at University College London School of Medicine from where he graduated in 1987.

He then received an MRC Research Training Award for his 1st Class Honours degree in Nutrition. An MRC Research Training Fellowship led to his PhD at the Royal Postgraduate Medical School at the Hammersmith Hospital, which is part of Imperial College these days. In 1999 he became a senior lecturer at University College London and a consultant at University College Hospital in 1999.

He was the lead clinician for Upper Gastrointestinal Cancer at UCLH from 2001-8, and has previously chaired the North London Cancer Network Upper Gastrointestinal Tumour Board. He is a specialist advisor to the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE).

The London Gastroenterology Centre is a team of gastroenterologists and surgeons who specialise in diagnosing and treating gut disorders in world class private hospitals and clinics in central London and Harley Street.
