Dr Graham is a Consultant Gastroenterologist and interventional endoscopist at University College Hospital, London. Dr Graham has won awards both nationally and internationally for his work in cancer prevention. He is regularly invited to speak at British and overseas conferences.

He trained at St Bartholomew's and the Royal London Hospitals where he also undertook a Bachelor of Science degree. He completed his training in Gastroenterology in North-East London and undertook a PhD at University College London focussing on early detection of oesophageal and gastric cancer and novel diagnostic and therapeutic endoscopic techniques. He was appointed as a consultant in 2016.

Dr Graham strives to deliver high-quality care to his patients. This is achieved through taking a holistic approach in which his patients are listened to, their questions are answered and their needs understood and met. The main focus of his work is in the management of patients with acid reflux (heartburn), swallowing problems (in particular the management of strictures) and pre-malignant or malignant conditions of the stomach and oesophagus. Alongside this Dr Graham is passionate about his research focusing on providing high-quality diagnostic and therapeutic endoscopy, the early diagnosis of cancer and the long-term management of patients with pre-malignant conditions of their stomach or oesophagus. This work ensures that Dr Graham delivers up to date, leading care. Finally, Dr Graham is passionate about teaching and aids in hosting numerous live endoscopy workshops at UCH. This allows Dr Graham to embrace and deliver innovative endoscopic therapies to his patients.
