Based at The London General Practice in Harley Street, Dr Sam Bennett is an experienced private GP with a special interest in musculoskeletal medicine and occupational medicine. He is also qualified to provide medical examinations for the Civil Aviation Authority.

Dr Sam Bennett is a private GP and lead for information governance at The London General Practice in Harley Street. With broad experience in a variety of areas including orthopaedics, he provides flexible, personal care for UK-based and international patients, including medical consultations, out of hours care, health screening, occupational health services and Civil Aviation Authority medicals.

Dr Sam Bennett qualified in medicine at the University of Wales College of Medicine in 2001. Following his basic surgical training in South Wales, he completed specialist orthopaedic training in London up to the level of Registrar before switching to General Practice.

Dr Bennett has general practice experience both in the NHS and in the private sector, working as a GP in an NHS practice in Hampton Court, Southwest London and for BUPA. Now in full time private practice at The London General Practice in Harley Street, he enjoys the variety involved in general practice and retains a particular interest in musculoskeletal health.

Dr Bennett also has an interest in occupational health and is an Aviation Medical Examiner for the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA).

The London General Practice is a leading private GP service in Harley Street offering flexible, personalised care for UK-based and international patients. GP consultations are supported by in-house diagnostics such as CT, MRI, cardiac tests and cancer tests, with the majority of patients able to have their tests, and often results, on the same day as consultation. Should further treatment be necessary, the Practice has unrivalled links with leading specialists and strong relationships with world-renowned private hospitals. House or hotel calls are available day or night.
