Simon Brewster is a leading Consultant Urologist and Prostate Cancer Specialist in Oxfordshire. He also treats bladder cancer, other prostate disease including benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) and general urological conditions such as haematuria and recurrent urinary infections.

Simon Brewster specialises in prostate cancer and other prostate disease (PSA kinetics, Benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH), prostatitis). He is trained as a general urologist and treats a variety of conditions including blood in the urine (haematuria), bladder cancer and recurrent urinary infections.

Simon finished his basic medical training at Charing Cross Hospital in 1986, graduating with honours in Pathology and a 1st class Bsc. degree in Anatomy. He worked as an anatomy demonstrator at his medical school for a year, before moving to Bristol to train in general surgery and later in urology. During this time he developed his interest in prostate disease, having spent two years in full-time laboratory research, leading to the award of his MD doctorate thesis in 1993 from Bristol University. During the final stages of his training he attained the FRCS (Urology) and went to John Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore to develop expertise in radical prostatectomy with Dr Patrick Walsh.

Simon was appointed as a consultant and honorary senior lecturer in Oxford in 1998, where he pioneered the prostate cancer diagnostic and active surveillance services, radical prostatectomy, and recently Holmium laser prostate enucleation (HoLEP). He was Chairman (and a named pelvic cancer specialist) of the Thames Valley Cancer Network Urology steering group 2008-13, with responsibilities to advise commissioners and ensure equal provision of NHS cancer services in Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire and part of Warwickshire. He has led on prostate cancer service provision, teaching and clinical governance for the urology department in Oxford and is currently serving as an elected Governor of the Oxford University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust.
