Dr Mani Naghibi is a Consultant Gastroenterologist at St Mark's Hospital, The National Bowel Hospital, London and an Honorary Senior Lecturer at Imperial College London. Trained in all aspects of gastroenterology, he has a special clinical interest in nutrition, functional bowel disorders, conditions that cause change in bowel habit and abdominal pain, and reflux.

Dr Naghibi graduated from Guy's, King's and St Thomas' Medical School in 2005 and went on to undertake his specialist gastroenterology training in hospitals in London and Wessex. He was awarded his Medical Doctorate (MD) for his work on artificial nutrition for patients with cancer by the University of Southampton, where he also completed his Fellowship in Advanced Human Nutrition.

Dr Naghibi was appointed as a Gastroenterology Consultant at the internationally renowned St Mark's Hospital, The National Bowel Hospital in 2014. He was Cancer Lead for Upper GI at St Mark's from 2015 until 2018 and is an endoscopy trainer for trainee doctors.

In 2014, Dr Naghibi was awarded the Shire Prize for innovation in gastroenterology for designing and implementing a web-based system that enabled patients with inflammatory bowel disease to take greater control of their health and medical treatments. He was awarded an NHS Clinical Excellence Award in 2017.

Dr Naghibi is a member of GI Doctors, a team of leading London specialists in gastroenterology, upper GI surgery and lower GI surgery. Working together, they provide expert treatment for the whole range of disorders of the gastrointestinal tract, while individually their bespoke experience can be applied to meet the particular needs of each patient.
