Dr Natalie Phillips is a Consultant Gastroenterologist and Hepatobiliary Physician at Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust. A member of GI Doctors, a multidisciplinary team of leading gastrointestinal specialists, she provides private assessment and treatment for general gastroenterology and hepatopancreatobiliary conditions at The London Clinic and London Digestive Centre in the Harley Street Medical District, and at the Sainsbury Wing at Hammersmith Hospital.

Dr Phillips qualified from Guys, Kings and St Thomas' Medical School in 2003 and undertook her postgraduate training in London, gaining Membership of the Royal College of Physicians (MRCP). Following her specialist gastroenterology training on the North West Thames rotation, in 2012 she completed an International Fellowship in ERCP/EUS at Royal Northshore Hospital in Sydney, Australia.

Dr Phillips was a post CCT (Certificate of Completion of Training) fellow at the Hammersmith Hospital for a year, before taking up her post as a Consultant Gastroenterologist in 2016. She completed her Masters in Translational Medicine at Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust in 2017.

Dr Phillips performs diagnostic and therapeutic endoscopy procedures, and has completed specialist training in interventional endoscopy. She is endoscopy training lead for Hammersmith Hospital, responsible for the training of both undergraduate and postgraduate students.

Dr Phillips is a member of GI Doctors, a team of leading London specialists in gastroenterology, upper GI surgery and lower GI surgery. Combined, their unique practice allows them to offer treatment for the full range of disorders affecting the gastrointestinal tract, while individually they apply their bespoke experience to provide expert, tailored care to meet the needs of every patient.
