Dr Nicholas Robinson is a renowned consultant cardiologist based in Essex and London. He has over 20 years of experience in providing high-quality services in all aspects of adult cardiology and heart treatments. Since graduating from Cambridge University, Dr Robinson has gained particular expertise in the diagnosis and treatment of heart attacks, the role of stent insertion and the diagnosis and treatment of angina symptoms.

After studying as a full scholar at Dulwich College, Dr Robinson was awarded an exhibition by St John's College to study medical sciences at the world-famous Cambridge University. During this time, he attended clinical studies training at St Thomas' hospital in London, before graduating from Cambridge University in 1987.

Following his graduation, Dr Robinson was appointed cardiology registrar at King's College and then senior registrar and clinical lecturer at St Bartholomew's and the London Chest Hospitals. His role exposed him to angiography, coronary angioplasty and stent insertion. He was appointed as a Consultant at St Bartholomew's Hospital before helping to set up the new state of the art Essex Cardiothoracic Centre.
